

The major work from a hero of Beat poetry, political activism, and rock 'n' roll.

“Sanders [is] the poet-maestro of American history.”
—MICHAEL McCLURE

“Sanders has been an astonishing and fertile presence in our cultural and political landscape. . . . But it is Sanders’s poetry, more than anything else he does, that pulls together all the varied strands of his interests to weave them into the body of one of our century’s most coherent poetics.”

—ANDREI CODRESCU, NATIONAL PUBLIC RADIO

“In Sanders’s poetry we find . . . one of the clearest and most necessary bodies of work still being written today.”

—Poetry Project Newsletter

In this collection, Edward Sanders animates the whole of human history—breathing new life into ancient stories, celebrating artists and activists, telling tales of bohemian escapades, eulogizing friends and politicians, and lamenting the follies that have led us to war time and again. With exuberant pragmatism and visionary scholarship, Sanders continues to mark the way forward for poets and peacemakers, rock 'n' rollers, and revolutionaries.

In the 1960s, Edward Sanders co-founded the groundbreaking rock band The Fugs, opened the Peace Eye Bookstore, and appeared on the cover of Life magazine, becoming a hero of the American counterculture. He is a classics scholar, pioneer in investigative poetics, inventor of musical instruments, publisher of The Woodstock Journal, and author of many books, including the best-selling Charles Manson exposé The Family, the ambitious, nine-volume project, America: A History in Verse, and the recently reissued American Book Award-winning collection, Thirsting for Peace in a Raging Century. He lives in Woodstock, New York.
